By Carl Gewirtz

maal Herald Tribens PARIS - Financial markets are bracing for turbulence this week, with a weak Japanese equity market at the vortex. Trading in Tokyo could set the mood for what happens in Europe, where prices of stocks and bonds appear vulnerable, U.S. markets are seen least exposed to upset, but even there uncertainty is increasing.

The prospective turbulence is driven by this uncertainty. In Japan, it is fear that the government's inability to implement political reform will stall plans to revive the economy. In Europe, it is worry that the Bundesbank's pause in lowering interest rates will delay Continental

In the United States, where bine-chip stock prices rose to a record Friday, it is concern about how the California earthquake and East Coast cold spell will affect first-quarter growth. the timing of the expected increase in interest rates and prospective corporate earnings.

"It could be a difficult week," cautions
George Magnus at S.G. Warburg in London.
News of the political impasse in Tokyo came after share trading in the cash market had ended Friday, but options prices tumbled nearby 4 percent. "There's little doubt the opening in Tokyo Monday will be bad, "says Sirnon Crane, a London-based trading adviser. "The question is, does it stay bad?" The worry about a meltdown in Tokyo is acute because only two months remain until the end of the Japanese financial year on March 31. The feared consequence for markets elsewhere is that the year-end closing may force Japanese institutional investors to take profits on foreign holdings to offset domestic losses.

Regardless of what the Japanese do, Continental markets are looking fragile. Both bond and equity prices have factored in an accelerating decline in German interest rates, which the Bundesbank last week indicated are now on hold. Some analysts fear that the pause could extend to March: they see the central bank stymied by temporary distortions pushing up money supply growth and the January cost of living index as well as by the weakness of the Deutsche mark. The selloff Friday in the German government bond futures market is seen as an omen of weekness in European bond markets this week. A big concern is that a substantial amount of this year's heavy volume of new issues in many European markets is still in the hands of underwriters, whose short-term linancing costs ex-ceed the income earned on holding the paper. If the price of the paper starts falling, intermediaries may decide it is cheaper to eat their losses and dump their holdings.

The performance of the dollar could also play a role. U.S. investors were reported to be large sellers of DM paper, repatriating funds in anticipation of an incipient increase in U.S. interest rates and a rise in the value of the dollar. But the natural upsets in America last week, although difficult to measure accurately. may alter that outlook.

"It's difficult to get a handle on the impact of the earthquake and cold snap, says Susan M. Hering at Salomon Brothers in New York. There will be a short-term hit to output. January's data will be hit hard. But how it balances out for the full first quarter is unclear."

This is important for the currency market. Even enthusiasts of a strong dollar advance such as Paul Cherikow at Union Bank of Switzerland agree that "a tightening by the Fed is the key to the dollar's next leg up."

The dollar traded oddly Friday, weakening against the yen and the mark during most of the Lloyd Bentsen, on Sunday in Tokyo, explaining Washington's hard-line stance on trade.

U.S. Demands That Japan Give Way in Trade Talks

Hosokawa, Under Fire At Home, Gets a Tough Message From Bentsen

> By Paul Blustein and Clay Chandler

Washington Post Service TOKYO - Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen warned Japan's embattled prime minister, Morihiro Hosokawa, on Sunday that the United States would re-examine its trade policy toward Japan unless the two nations reached "credible" trade agreements by their Feb. 11 summit meeting. Mr. Bentsen's remarks, which came two days after Mr. Hosokawa's government plunged into political crisis, put the Clinton administration on record as insisting on significant trade con-cessions from Tokyo regardless of the problems facing the prime minister. Mr. Bentsen's warning, delivered personally at President Bill Clinton's request, appears to have put U.S.-Japanese relations on a collision course in the weeks ahead. Rather than play down expectations for the upcoming session between Mr. Hosokawa and Mr. Clinton, the freasury chief raised the stakes. He dismissed suggestions that Washington would ease pressure on Mr. Hosokawa over the terms of several trade pacts aimed at increasing Japanese purchases of foreign autos, auto parts, telecommunications equipment and other products. The pacts are scheduled to be finalized soon under deadlines set in the "framework" agreement that Washington and Tokyo struck in July, establishing broad principles governing their economic relationship. "We want a good set of agreements," Mr. Bentsen said he told Mr. Hosokawa. "We would far prefer no agreements to weak agree-

"If we do not have credible agreements by the time of the summit," he said, "we would have to re-examine the basis of the framework." Asked if he was making a threat, Mr. Bentsen said he did not intend to, and was simply reflecting the realities of the simation."

But the tenor of his comments was striking given the warm endorsements that Mr. Clinton and other administration officials have extendand other administration of scans have extended in the past to Mr. Hosokawa, and given the severe situation facing the prime minister.

Mr. Hosokawa, a champion of deregulation and foe of corruption whose seven-party coalifrom power last August, suffered a devastating defeat in parliament on Friday of electoral reform legislation upon which he had staked his political career.

Although Mr. Bentsen did not suggest that the administration had given up on Mr. Ho-sokawa, his remarks contained no words of encouragement, and his expressions of sympathy for the prime minister's plight were limited.

Mr. Hosokawa "has his work before him" in trying to gain approval of a compromise political reform bill, he said.

Mr. Bentsen said Mr. Clinton had asked him to add the visit to Tokyo to the end of a lengthy trip to Russia and Asia in order to drive home the importance that the White House places on the trade issue.

Even before Mr. Hosokawa's recent setback, many trade experts believed it likely that the trade agreements reached at the Feb. 11 meeting would involve fuzzily worded compromises, allowing both sides to claim victory and avoiding a damaging rupture in relations.

But Mr. Bentsen's comments, and similar remarks made by other American officials in private, leave the administration little room for such fudging.

"We are not going to accept a nonagreement and characterize it as something," said an American diplomat based in Tokyo, "We are insisting on real progress here. If there is no progress, it will be there for the world to see." According to Japanese news reports, Mr. Hosokawa told Mr. Bentsen that he hoped "to apply leadership, making efforts to improve the outcome of the trade talks.

But the prime minister has publicly sided with Trade Ministry officials on the issue that most sharply divides Washington and Tokyo the U.S. demand that numerical targets be set for Japanese imports of foreign goods and ser-

American and Japanese negotiators have been locked in a seemingly intractable dispute over the issue for months. Japanese officials, who once agreed to a pact envisioning a 20 percent share of the Japanese market for foreign computer chips, yow they will never again strike such an accord because it would be in opposition to free trade.

Now the Philippine secretary of local government, Rafael Ahman 3d, is proposing a new approach to the Illicit industry: to legalize it.

Mr. Alunan argues that organizing the estimated 5,000 gunsaniths in Danao into a legal "cooperative" would help control gunnaning and reduce the number of unregistered frearms

The best thing to do is to legalize the illegal but very skilled gun traders so they can produce guns for export and even earn dollars as well as reduce the importation of firearms," Ahman said in Manila. He expressed hope that the gun makers could eventually set up ventures with major U.S. manufacturers. The idea appalls Philippine gun-control advocates and prozzles even senior police officials. Although the gun makers say they favor legalization, the police say, they do not really want the sort of controls that this would entail.

Behind the debate is a pervasive gun culture that Filipinos say was inherited from the United States, the colonial power during the first half of this century.

The prevalence of guns has helped give Mamila the highest murder rate among major Asian cities, according to a 1991 study by the Washington-based Population Crisis Committee. Manila's 30.5 murders a year per 100,000 inhabitants contrasts with Taipei's, at 8.7; Bangkok's, at 7.6; Beijing's, at 2.5. and Tokyo's, at 1.4, according to the study. The Washington murder rate, the highest of major U.S. cives, is about 79 per 100,000. "In the United States, there are so many good things we can imitate," lamented Reynaldo Pacheco, a leading gun-control activist.

HONG KONG - For a politician yet to face his first election, 40 may seem old enough. But not necessarily by Chinese standards, as Henry Tang Ying-yen, a wealthy Hong Kong legislator and businessman, well knows.

"My father, who is 70, jokes that when he goes to Beijing, they call him young man, "said Mr. Tang, an appointed member of the colony's Legislative Council. His father's role on the Chinese People's Political Consultative Committee brings him into contact with Communists in their 80s and 90s who survived the Long March and Mao Zedone.

"I'm a baby to the Chinese hierarchy," the younger Mr. Tang noted. "I may have some problems because of that."

Many political observers believe he will wield increasing influence as Hong Kong heads for a return to Chinese sovereignty in 1997. Meanwhile, he must run for the first time to keep his council seat in the 1995 elections.

Like his father, Henry Tang is in textiles and politics. But unlike his father, who rebuilt in Hong Kong a Shanghai-area family business that was sezzed by Communists in 1949, Mr. Tang bas chosen the limelight and electoral politics.

No one, including Henry Tang, knows exactly where that choice will lead.

Part of a generation of Western-educated Asian business leaders for whom success goes beyond the bottom line and politics means more than golf with the right people, Mr. Tang hopes to combine the best of two worlds in public policy. That will not be easy in a Hong Kong where Chinese-British feuding over details of the colony's handover is forcing people to

The way Mr. Tang sees it, there is a third side: Hong Kong's. He has chosen to support it with a business-with-a-conscience conservatism that neither laments Britain's departure not kowtows to in 1991, Mr. Tang spends only half his time manag-ing Peninsula Knitters Ltd., the family textile and electronics manufacturing company, which is expanding rapidly in China.

It was the late 1970s when Mr. Tang's father asked him to return from his studies in the United States and begin helping him manage the business as it took the daring step of investing in China at the end of the Cultural Revolution, the mass terror launched by Mao Zedong in 1966 to radicalize society. The campaign virtually closed China to the world before

Mr. Tang was nominated to sit on Shanghai's Chinese People's Political Consultative Committee, which has much political status but little policy making clout and offers a smaller role than his father enjoys on the national committee.

Back in his Hong Kong political forum, Mr. Tang works to tighten regulations on workers' health and safety, lobbies for a government-supported pension plan for the colony and supports measures that threaten to disrupt Hong Kong's love affair with

"Although I am from the business sector, I want to do more than merely protect what I already have." said Mr. Tang, who has a degree in sociology from the University of Michigan and did graduate work at Yale. government to make tough decisions for the common good.

For example, Mr. Tang recently disassociated himself from his own political group, the Liberal Party, when it supported a group of public housing tenants who refused to allow a home for the mentally disabled into their neighborhood.

"If a large housing project rejects these people, where do we settle them?" he asked. "The position wasn't right or practical."

For all his policies and feelings, he has a first date with the ballot box next year. Few are able to predict how he will do.

"He has a good intellect and he's done well as a legislator, but he won't really be a politicist mult he wins an election," said T. L. Tsim, a political analyst here. "We will have to see another side of terry." The 1995 election probably will focus squarely on relations with China. Once again, Mr. Tang s views attempt to cross the divide.

Our society has become more prosper said. "We have reached a level where we wint to go after more ideological changes. We want more representative government, and we want a stronger voice in determining what to do with our society."

How then does he justify his strong opposition to electoral reforms proposed by Governor Chris Parten that seek to deepen Hong Kong's voting the for the last elections under British rule? Did his support for Western ideals wither as China, a some of wealth for Peninsula Knitters, signaled its ofposi-

"Without a hope of becoming independent we just move from being a British colony to a Chinese colony," Mr. Tang warned. "As long as we have an executive-led government, it will never be democratic. And as long as we are not a sovereign state, we will never have a say on what we want to have in our

"Once I accept that fact, it is my duty to think in a responsible manner. And that means we have to cooperate with China."

This stance is typical of many people in Hong Kong who have profited from the economic and social freedoms granted by colonial rule, yet believe that accommodation rather than confrontation with China will more likely protect what they possess. "If we were to go our own way by implementing the Patten proposals without Beijing's agreement, we give the Chinese a carte blanche to come in and nge the system in whatever way they want after 1997," Mr. Tang said. # Health Care Overshadows All as Congress Returns to Work and the Senate return to work on Tuesday expecting to be judged on how they deal with health care, the biggest domestic issue Congress has confronted in three decades.

By Adam Clymer New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The House

It may even prove to be the most complicated task that Congress has ever faced, involving far more

"In fact, it might not get this cold again for the next 2 years," Paul G. Knight, a meteopologist at the Pennsylvania Stafe University Weather Communications Group, said last week as temperatures were plunging to record lows across much of the nation's eastern half.

The free fall into the deep freeze this month seemed all the more shocking because of the many mild winters that preceded it. Its cause was a deep dip to the south last-week in the main west-to-east jet stream marking the boundary be--tween Arctic air and the warmer air to the south. The shift allowed an entire pool of air from northern Canada to move southward across the eastern half of the country.

Now the jet stream is shifting again, forecasters say, and should move back into Canada, taking the a supercold air with it. The forecasters say the wild be-

Clinton Cuts Deficit Forecast

WASHINGTON — President Bill Clinton says that the spending restraints Congress and the White House imposed last year are beginning to pay off and that the budgethe will propose for next year will have a deficit below $180 billion, far smaller than projections made last year.

Mr. Clinton disclosed the new deficit projection, down from an estimate of $300 billion last year in

Along with the deficit projection for the fiscal 1995 budget comes economic pain for some. The administration plans to cut spending for hundreds of programs, and it appears likely that it will again try to save several billion dollars by holding down pay raises for government workers. Mr. Clinton asserted Saturday that the administration had "built the foundation for a lasting economy recovery," although he said the nation still had "a long way to go."

the military success being demonstrated, and hoped for, by the mostly Muslim government. It has had some success in breaking the United Nations arms embargo, and recently it won back six Muslim towns in central Bosnia from Croatian forces, even while engaging Serbian forces, too. These campaigns, unlike the wellpublicized Scrbian siege of Sarajevo, take place largely beyond the gaze of the world press. The new element has already contributed to collapse of internationally sponsored partition talks among Serbs, Croats and Muslims.

Ordinarily one might plead with the parties to return to the table. It must count heavily. however, that the Muslim-led government the most injured party - is at this point most responsible for continuing the war. Otherwise abandoned, and notwithstanding their losses, Muslims seek to regain all lost Muslim-majority lands. It is not so easy for the abandoners to tell them that they should be content with the 30 percent slice that the Serbs and Croats would, conditionally, provide.

Still, Muslims cannot ignore a second consequence of their military surge. The Crosts, sometime partners of the Muslims in Bosnia, have switched sides. Previously warring Serbia and Croatia, and Bosnia's Serbs and Croats,

The new element in the Bosnia equation is have just signed parallel agreements to start normalizing relations. This could bead off general escalation by deflating the explosive issue of the Serbian minority in Croatia. But it could also isolate Bosnia's Muslims and perhaps even tempt them - another recipe for escalation to reach for support from fellow Muslims in Kosovo, Macedonia and Albania.

The new Muslim military policy has also increased the pressure on governments with troops in the United Nations peacekeeping force to pull them out. Mainstays France, Britain and Canada are tormented by the mismatch between the requirement for suffi-cient force and political backing to accomplish their humanitarian mission and the short leash on which they are kept by NATO and the UN Security Council and secretariat. President Bill Clinton warned NATO in Brussels against making "empty threats" of air strikes. He and it went ahead anyway and made a new one. We think that, notwithstanding the costs and frustrations, it remains useful to keep UN forces on the ground; it is not too late for Americans to join their humanitarian mission. But cannot the poor Bosnians be spared further phony offers of undeliverable air strikes or extra military aid?

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

By Diplomacy and Denial

The United States has traditionally tried to stop the spread of nuclear arms by talking nations out of wanting the weapons in the first place or by denying them the technology to make arms. But now that proliferation ranks high among the dangers to U.S. security, the Clinton administration faces pressure to pursue a third course, military action.

Nonproliferation hawks, impatient with the traditional tactics of diplomacy and denial, cite the Gulf War and the subsequent disarming of Iraq as proof that force works. President Bill Clinton has wisely resisted. While keeping the military option in reserve, he has focused on diplomacy and on curbing trafficking in nuclear components to keep countries like North Korea and Iran from building bombs.

What currently has the hawks in full cry is North Korea's delay in resuming insernational inspections. At a minimum, they want to impose economic sanctions, backed by a naval blockade, but some also advocate air strikes.

The hawks routinely cite Iraq as evidence that air power yields results. But their argument is unconvincing. The 1981 Israeli attack on Iraq's Osirak reactor did not destroy Saddam Hussein's nuclear program but only drove it underground. Nor did allied bombing during the Gulf War succeed. It took persistent international inspectors to root out Iraq's bomb-making infrastructure. Economic sanctions are less risky than air strikes, which could provoke a violent reaction from a volatile country like North Korea But there is no assurance that an economically strangled North Korea would welcome inspectors or shut down its nuclear program and it might turn belligerent.

The North's record of double-dealing makes the American Congress and bureaucracy understandably skeptical about diplomacy. And South Korea is uneasy about having the United States deal directly with the North. That is why it takes courage for President Clinton to try diplomacy first.

The president is on equally sound footing in trying to make it harder for countries to ship arms-producing technology to nations that cover their own nuclear arsenals. He needs to persuade countries that possess such technology to impose righter export controls on their manufacturers. The United States has traditionally granted allies access to American dualuse technology that could be employed both for weapons and for peaceful purposes like nuclear power plants. But it has denied such technology to foes. Now it must deny dual-use technology to states that export it to renegades like Iran, and persuade others to do likewise.

The administration can also improve the climate for nonproliferation by accelerating negotiations to ban all nuclear testing by 1995.

Mr. Clinton's approach has had some success in South Africa, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine. Yet the Pentagon is prudent to hedge against failure by preparing now for a war against a nuclear-armed foe. Developing smart bombs to penetrate underground weapons factories and improving intelligence make sense so long as military countermeasures do not shift the focus from the first line of defense - the strategy of diplomacy and denial. That strategy may not be as sensational as air strikes, but it runs less of a risk, and slowly

Reform's Setback in Russia Indicts an Arrogant IMF

reasserted political dominance in Russia last week. The resignations of two key re formers, Yegor Gaidar and Boris Fyodorov, from Boris Yelisin's cabinet are not just a failure for the Clinton administration, which has blithely accepted President Yeltsin's commitment to reform but a serions sethack for Russia's move to-cal life in Russia. While pundits debated the relative merits of shock therapy versus gradualism, the real issue was far simpler.

Would reformers have the political strength and Western financial backing to pursue a sensible and consistent financial policy, or would they be done in by a bitter and corrupt Communist opposition?

For two years, reformers in Moscow struggled for power while Western governments promised them large-scale aid. The financial crisis left behind by the Communist regime was too deep. The reformers could not win without outside help, but help never arrived, and the reformers paid the price, losing badly in the December elections.

The United States and its allies had turned over the task of bailing out Russia to the International was handed over. This might have been prudent banking practice, but it was disastrous foreign-assistance policy — and worse foreign policy.

What is even more troubling is that these institutions blundered in their assessment of the situation in Russia. It was not just excessive caution that stopped the flow of sup-port. It was their lack of understanding about what to do.

The urgant tasks of financial reconstruction were admittedly com-plex, but the broad outlines should have been clear. Mikhail Gorbachev we been clear. Mikhail Gorbachev and the Communist regime had left Russia in financial shambles, with a budget deficit of more than 20 percent of GDP paid for by printing money; a rampant and corrupt flow of subsidized loans from the central bank to state enterprises; an un-payable foreign debt; depleted hard

The main goals of financial policy should have been to reduce the bud-get deficit; to float new government debt on the domestic market, in order to cover the budget deficit without printing new money; to stanch the flow of cheap government loans to weak industries; to establish a separate Russian currency so that Russia could pursue a monetary policy independent of its neighbors.

CONTENCY reserves.

At the same time, international grants and loans should have been provided to help the government pay its bills. All of these tasks were urgent, and each piece of the package was needed to support the others.

Critics might derisively call the package shock therapy, but these measures are the essential remedies for a financial collapse and have a pedigree stretching back to Alexander Hamilton's rescue of American finances in 1790, Hjalmar Schacht's. solution for Weimar Germany's hy-perinflation in 1923 and Ludwig-Erhard's creation of a democratic; market economy in Germany after.

World War II. In all those cases, outside help Was crucial

The IMF failed miserably in advising the Group of Seven countries and the Yeltsin administration on Russia's financial reconstruction. It discouraged Russia from rapidly introducing a separate national currency. For two years it downplayed Russia's need and ability to issue domestic treasury bonds, focusing nearly all its efforts on pressuring the Russians to make politically impossible cuts in the budget delicit.

It advised Russia against the sta-bilization of the ruble exchange rate and held back a ruble stabilization fund designed to support such a policy. Most remarkably, it never acknowledged the urgency of mobi-lizing international assistance to help Russia finance its deficit.

The IMF's relentless advice was to cut the deficit, not to find acceptable and noninflationary ways to finance part of it. The World Bank also failed in its most important task: to help finance a viable

Why was the IMF so inept? For a simple reason. For 50 years, it has been nearly as secretive and monopolistic as the Central Committee of the Communist Party. All IMF loan documents concerning Russia are secret.

The only information the IMF publishes is general economic data, not specific policy advice. The IMF is can off from independent profes-sional scrutiny and from competi-tion. It alone determines whether

Western aid will flow. Like any long-standing monopoly, it has grown arrogant, self-protective and sloopy

And yet whenever anything goes wrong with an IMF program, the United States Treasury and the other Group of Seven governments draw the wagons around the IMF. The Western governments have to understand that it is one thing to defend the basic and sound princi-ples espoused by the IMF —budget discipline, responsible monetary policy, open markets - and another to cover up the shortcomings of the organization's technical work and its reluctance to make loans in in-

The reformers may or may not get another chance in Russia. Now that they are no longer heading the key ministries, there is little the United States can do. It will have to watch how the policies of the new government develop, but it makes little sense for the Clinton administration to commit to large-scale economic assistance unless reformers regain power. In any case, American credibility on aid is already at a low ebb.

If reforms somehow continue, the worst response on the West's part would be to send an unreformed IMF back into the fray. The IMF's managing director, Michel Camdessus, should accept responsibility for this debacle and step down. The IMF needs new management at the top and a new direction, based on the best practices in financial stabilization, risktaking in lending money and openness to professional scrutiny.

The best the United States can do now is to prepare for another chance to support reforms before Russia poses a renewed threat to itself and the rest of the world. The New York Times.

This Isn't the Time to Turn Up Foreign Pressure on Hosokawa

T OKYO - Prime minister Morihiro Ho-A sokawa is battling to keep his eight-party coalition afloat after the rejection last week of political reform bills by the upper house of the Diet. He now faces his most testing period in office as troubles mount on all fronts There will be frantic efforts to patch together a compromise reform package before the partiament session ends on Saturday. Domestic and international economic problems threaten to overwhelm Mr. Hosokawa. The danger is that America and other trading partners that have large and persistent deficits with Japan will lose patience at precisely the moment when it is least able to offer substantial concessions.

News that Japan's trade surplus for 1993 reached a record high of more than $120 billion is alarming for a nation in the midst of its worse shifting from the minutiae of political reform to a concern that all-out efforts be made to pull the economy from its prolonged shump.

market and cut the U.S. trade deficit. Officials in Tokyo are womied that the negotiations on sensitive economic issues may be aggravated by the recent political setbacks for the ruling coalition. Any weakening of Mr. Hosokawa's power, it is feared, might lead to increased American pressure on market access issues at a time when Japan is becoming increasingly anxious about its own economic prospects. The stubborn recession is preoccupying almost everyone in Japan. Consumers in 1994 are a very different breed from those of the bubble economy years. They search for bargains and boast of discount purchases. Austerity is besoming a hallmark of contemporary lanen

For Mr. Hosokawa, the only plus in this situation is the lack of political fallout from the speedy belt-tightening exercise. Sociologists will see in recent events evidence of Japan's "situational ethic," in which the realities of any, his family, the grumbling so far has been largely in private at less overtime and shrinking bonuses. But there is also a hurking fear that a system of lifetime employment can no longer be sustained and may be overtaken by layous and increasing compension for a shrinking pool of jobs.

Middle-class Japan, to which most Japanese believe they belong, knows that its future will be less pleasant than the past. Graduates are already scrambling to find work, but Iew are yet blaming the government for the tough labor market. Instead, the public is receptive to talk of restructuring the economy and reducing the red tape that ties up large chunks of a supposedly free enterprise system. The climate appears right for converting Japan from an export machine into a consumer society.

Honeser many economists me predicting year. Will public opinion remain receptive to the need for restructuring that may well cause added pain? The more prolonged the downturn, the more testing it will become for Mr. Hosokawa's coalition, assuming that it manhis packages make little impression and con-sumer confidence dips further.

Any government in Tokyo would be severely challenged if its main trading partners chose to turn on the heat when Japan was in political and economic crisis. A double punch from an anxious Japanese public looking for a way out of domestic difficulties and new pressures from the Clinton administration might well put Mr. Hosokawa on the ropes.

To reasone Japanese voters that their jobs are safe, while opening the scandal-ridden construction industry and stripping off the layers of blubber from the distribution and service sectors, could be mission impossible.

Mr. Hosokawa must be hoping that the United States tones down its demands on Japan and waits while its key Asia-Pacific ally learns how Wilhour understanding from Washington, he may find himself on the political scrap heap.

The bulletins never change much from Turkey's long-sputtering war with the Kurdish separatists, but some recent incidents suggest that the intensity level is rising. Kurdish forces recently killed a high-ranking army commander, the government has moved sharply against several news organizations and convicted one editor of "insulting the army," and the 1993 casualty rate was 4,180 people, 1.511 of them civilians—up from about 2,600 the year before and a hefty proportion of the total number, 10,400, killed in the war's nine years.

It is an ominous direction, not just for the obvious reasons why any large-scale escalation of an internal war is ominous (casualties, damage to the economy, continuing human rights depredations, increasing carryover terrorism in Europe by Kurdish groups protesting the Turk-ish military's strong-arm tactics) but also for a couple of additional reasons peculiar to Turkey. A major one, of keen interest in America and also to the various countries with wars flaring on Turkey's periphery, is the continuing bad effect on Turkish democracy.

Authorities in Ankara have long faced an awkward simulion with the Kurdish Workers Party or PKK, which is classified by most governments (including America's) as a terrorist organization and one whose goal, an independent Kurdish state smack in the middle of a wildly unstable area, the Turkish government equates with the dismembering of its own country. But Ankara has also been consistently unable to deal with the rebels, and with the long-standing cultural suppression of Kurds that propels the support for them, without acting in ways that flagrantly break the human rights codes that Turkey has voluntarily signed. The military's visible role is always a sore spot in domestic politics for a country that has so often seen domestic instability end in military crackdowns. # Will the Clinton Administration's Foreign Policy Get Serious?

WASHINGTON — Go figure: Bobby Ray inman's flameout over the Peniagon and the naming of special prosecutor to probe Whitewater end Bill Clinton's first year in office on bitter notes. At the same moment, public confidence in problem (nine years being a long test by any definition). That tough line, and the accompa-Mr. Clinton rises to its highest level, equaling that of Ronald Reagan at the same point in his presidency.

The president will no doubt be tempted to find solece in the polls. But he should not conclude that the public does not care about the problems that the Inman nomination and Whitewater raise as long as the economy continues to improve. There is grist for such an interpre-tation in the latest New York Times-CBS News Poli, where an increase in public confidence in the economy powers a rise in Mr. Clinton's popularity. Half those polled in mid-January felt that the economy was getting better, with Mr. Clinton's approval rating returning to its previous high-water mark of 54 percent. Even if the self-serving interpreta-tion were true, it should not be controlling. Not when compared with the leadership challenges that Mr. Clinton has just begun to face. His "muddling through" approach to national security and foreign policy after a full year in office will soon be severely tested in Russia and elsewhere.

The conventional wisdom on Mr. laman's self-immolation on the pyre of paranoia says he is weird and the president has douged a pour Mr. Inman is not the overriding issue esident has dodged a bullet. But in the Imman affair. Everything comes back to the man who chose Mr. Inman for a vital job, presumably on the advice of his most trusted advisers. Mr. Clinton has offered or almost offered the job to four men who represen: a broad, almost contradictory

By Jim Hoagland spread of interests, personalities and political beliefs. Les Aspin accepted but fell from favor. Mr. Imman and Sam Nunn turned it down this month. Mr. Clinton was on the verge of offering the job to Warren Rudman, the retired Republican senator and budget-cutter from New Hampshire, before Mr. Rudman backed out. The connecting thread for the four men seems to be a perception by Mr. Clinton that they would help him with Congress. Help him with what remains muddled. For all their individual virtues, these four choices do not add up to a picture of what Mr. Clinton himself wants to accomplish in defense and security policies.

What, not who, is the question that demands Mr. Clinton's focus. He should worry less about the impressions that others hold of him and his actions and more about the substance foreign and security policy.

His trip this mouth to Europe and Russia was a good if belated begin-ning in that direction. But his credible performances at the NATO summit and in getting Ultraine to sign a dequalearization accord need to be followed up with a consistency of attention and clarity of purpose that has not always been apparent in his first year in office. Last July, just before he left for the Group of Seven summit of industrialized democracies in Tokyo, Mr. Clinton invited a group of journalists to lunch. I came away impressed with how much he had absorbed in foreign policy in six months on the job. A few weeks ago, prior to the Europe trip, he again served lunch and his views on his upcoming foreign trip. This time the president seemed less serventuresome and much less excited about the challenges of being the first about the chancings of being the hist-post-Cold War president. The oppor-tunities for growth that seemed both apparent and challenging six months earlier had been eclipsed by the flak he took over Somalia, Bosnia, Haiti and now even Russia and Eastern Europe.

now even Kussia and Fastern Europe.

A troubling moment came when the president, who had strongly and repeatedly defended his decision not to offer East European countries early membership in NATO, was asked if anyone in his administration had seriously argued the opposite case to him No, the president said, no one had. Was it possible, I wondered that the president was unaware of the de-

Secretary of State Warren Christo-pher and National Security Adviser Anthony Lake initially leaving to-ward early membership before Ambassador at large Strobe Talbott won them over to his go-slow view? The debate was a useful exercise and produced the right result. There was no need to be ashamed of it.

Or was it more likely that Mr. Clinton was carefully calculating the effect of his answer and deciding not to encourage stories about disagreement and dissent within his administration? I thought that to be the case, given the ustration's obsession with presentation and appearances.

If so, that denial may be seen by the president as prudent news man-agement. But it is not leadership. Mr. Clinton has yet to encourage the kind of public debate about America's place in the world beyond the Cold War that is needed if a new consensus is to be found. Acknowledging intelli-gent internal dissent could help stimulate that national debate. A year without a significant, clear challenge to America's interests abroad has enabled Mr. Clinton to muddle through. Viewing the Innan affair, Europeans who expected the administration to take six months to get organized in managing world affairs say it will take 18 months instead. Better late than never. But it will not happen at all without a new consistency and clarity of purpose from the White House.

Toward Deregulation in Japan

For decades Japan pursued expon-led growth by helping producers at the expense of consumers. Regulations kept some prices high. so boosting firms' domestic profits; this provided a safe base from which to assault foreign markets. But the strategy has now hit a wall, Japan's trade surplus is too big and the yen too strong for growth to depend on ever-expanding exports. The bureaucrats know they must stimulate demand at home. Deregulation, which would cut prices and thus raise consumers' purchasing power, is the best way to do this. A thousand vested interests still stand in the way. Japan's government is preoccupied with political reform and the need to pass a budger. Yet Mr. Hosokawa seems serious about deregulation. He has commissioned several deregula-tion studies, the most radical of which proposes scrapping 15 of Japan's 21 government departments. Last month the government sent a tough warning to obstructive bureaucrats by sacking the third most senior official in the Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

ative that we redefine the relationship between the United States and the United Nations, and establish a congressional role in that relationship. As it stands now, the vote of our unelected representative to the United Nations has the power to commit billions of taxpayer dollars and to risk U.S. solders lives without any say from Congress. As joint U.S.-UN operations in Somalia, Bosnia and Harti have demonstrated, it is not in America's interest to let the United Nations define our fore:3n policy.

While congressional pressure did lead to certain midewarse adjustments in the Clinton administration's ill-conceived UN-driver rollides, the reality is that Congress prays no formal role in 100 peacesterping decisions. When the UN Security Council votes, American 12xpayers should grab their wallets.

keeping account is now an exploding in emanious emittement program.

Last fall Bill Clinton said the United Nations "must know when to say 'no.' Since then the Security Council — with the United States voting "yes"—has begun, continued or expanded peacekeeping operations in Mozambique, on the Iraq-Kuwait berder, in Somalia, Georgia, Cypus, El Salvador, Haiti, Rwanda, the feared Yngoslavia and Liberia the former Yugoslavia and Liberia. and is considering new operations in places like Tajikistan, Angola and Nagerno-Karabakh. The council said "no" only to Burundi.

To nelo fill this vacuum in congressional oversight, this week I will introduce a "peace powers act" that will meinde the following principles: Prohibit U.S. troops from serving under foreign command in UN operations. Our military personnel should be asked to risk their lives only in support of U.S. interests, in operations led by U.S. commanders.

(Namy, The men and women in the U.S. armed forces voluntarily enlist to protect and defend U.S. interests, and should not be turned over to a standing army at the beck and call of the UN secretary-general.

Bar U.S. forces from any standing the understanding that it would be a full partner in funding and deploy-ment decisions, not an afterthought. Institute truth in budgeting. When the administration does not budget enough for peacekeeping, money for these operations is drained from a number of sources, and increasingly from the Department of Defense. In-stead of raiding the defense budget— and hastening the return of the weakened, "hollow forces" of the late 1970s - the administration should submit to Congress a complete, and more realistic, annual funding request. Furthermore, the United Nations should be put on notice that we will not pay an ever escalating "contribu-tion" for UN peacekeeping — al-ready at 31.7 percent — without congressional input.

Stop shortchanging the United States. The United Nations must give full credit for all U.S. contributions to peacekeeping operations, including personnel, transport and equipment. While the United States will spend roughly 1.5 million American tax dollars in Somalia, the United Nations will send us a bill for an additional $500 million "assessment." The U.S. taxpayer can no longer afford the United Nations' warped accounting methods.

The peace powers act will not solve all the problems of subcontracting U.S. policy to an overambitious United Nations, However, by making Congress a full partner in major decisions, the act should ensure that U.S. foreign policy interests, soldiers and taxpayers are better protected.

eration would overcome Soviet belicosity.

As late as January 1990, these propositions, were refurbished in a Time article in which Mikhail Gorbachev was againsted Man of the Decade. Its author was Suphe Talbott, recently chosen to be deputy secretary of state, who argued that the doves of 40 years of Cold War debate had been right all along and that it had not been the West's policy that brought about the Soviet collapse but the inherent weakness of the Soviet system; indeed, that the collapse might have occurred eather had Western hardiners not enabled the Soviet leaders to rally their people on behalf of selmity.

The essence of these themes was repeated by

The essence of these themes was repeated by President Clinton on many occasions during his European trip. To explain why he did not favor the admission of Poland, Humgary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia into NATO, he argued in effect that such a step might be provocative. He added: "I say to all those in Europe and the United States who would simply have us draw a new line in Europe further east that we should not foreclose the possibility of the best possible future for Europe which is a democracy everywhere, a market economy everywhere, people cooperating everywhere for mutual security."

The assumptions behind his statements challenge the intellectual foundations of NATO, the core of America's postwar foreign policy.

Whether the former victims of Soviet imperialism should join NATO is a complicated question. There are many ways to accomplish that goal, from full membership to various levels of associate membership or, indirectly, via membership in the European Union.

But the key issue is not the timing of NATO expansion. In putting forward the Partnership for Peace, the administration did not just delay East European participation, it emphatically rejected the principle despite many misleading statements to the contrary.

The Partnership invites all the successor states of the Soviet Union and all of Moscow's former East European satellites to participate with NATO in a vague, multilazeral entity specializing in missions having next to nothing to do with realistic military tasks; it equates the victims of Soviet and Russian imperialism with its perpetrators and gives the same status to the Central Asian republics at the borders of Afghanistan as it gives to Poland, the victim of four partitions in which Russia participated and the route across which Russia has historically invaded Europe.

Therefore, if the Partnership for Peace is designed to propinate Russia, it cannot also serve as a way station into NATO, especially as the as a way station into 1972, appearing the proposition, rejected by all its predecessors for 40 years, that NATO is a potential threat to Russia. By Henry Kissinger

An official traveling with the president's par-ty expressed the logic behind the administration's position when he stated that Eastern Europe would have to find security in placating its feared neighbor. "The most effective thing for us," he said, "is to try to protect Eastern Europe by encouraging anti-imperialist, democratic tendencies in Russia."

It is instructive to compare the current approach with that of Dean Acheson when NATO was founded. Testifying before the Senate For-eign Relations Committee, the secretary of state was asked whether the Soviet Union had reason to fear NATO. His reply was: "Any nation which claims that this treaty is directed against it should be reminded of the biblical admonition that the guilty flee where no man porsueth."

What does it say about Russian attitudes if the expansion of NATO is perceived to be provocative? No reasonable observer can imagine that Poland, the Czeck Republic, Hungary or Slovakia could ever mount a military threat against Russia, either singly or in combination. The countries of Eastern Europe are terrified, not threatening. And NATO forces, doctrine and deployment are strictly defensive.

Moreover, Russia could tasily be given additional assurances, for instance, that no foreign troops would be stationed on the soil of new NATO members — assurances that already exist with respect to the former Fast German satellite.

The key question, however, is what the Ameri-in theory means for NATO. What is to be NATO's precise role in the new dispensation?

if a security guarantee along the Polish-Russian border creates an unacceptable dividing line, why is the current eastern border of NATO any more pacifying? If Russia can veto NATO membership now when it is in need of economic support, what will it veto when it has been strengthened through reform and American economic assistance?

It is high time to take another look at the administration's Russia policy, which stakes everything on a kind of psychoanalytic social engineering. The world evoked by Mr. Clin-ton's reference to "democracy everywhere ... people cooperating everywhere" is decades away. In the real environment of today's ethnic conflict and internecine struggle in the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, how is security and progress to be organized until that utopian world is reached? Can it be wise to create two categories of frontier - those which NATO protects and others which are refused protection - when both frontiers face in the same direction? The practical consequence will be to bring about an unprotected no-man's-land between Germany and Russia, which has historically been the cause of all recent European conflicts.

A realistic approach to Russia policy would recognize that integrating Russia into the international system has two components that must be kept in balance: influencing Russian attitudes and affecting Russian calculations.

The Clinton administration deserves support in extending generous economic assistance to Russian reform. And Russia should be made welcome in institutions that foster economic. welcome in institutions that foster econ cultural and political cooperation with the West. The Conference on Security and Cooper-ation in Europe would be a far better home for this than a Partnership for Peace that invents common military missions, within the frame-work of NATO, whose essential irrelevance underlines the artificiality of the conception.

The administration's lendency to treat Russian leaders as if they were fragile novices easily flustered by exposure to the realities of international politics is an invitation to disilhisionment and misunderstanding. These are tough men who have survived the brutal school of Communist and Russian politics: they are quite capable of comprehending a policy based on mutual respect for each other's national interest. In fact, they are likely to understand such a calculus better than appeals to an abstract and distant utopianism.

Russia is bound to have a special security interest in what it calls the "near abroad". the other republics of the former Soviet Union. The test is whether the rest of the world treats this relationship as an international problem subject to accepted rules of foreign policy or as an outgrowth of unilateral Russian decision-making to be influenced. if at all, by appeals to Russian goodwill.

Perhaps the most serious misapprehension of the Partnership for Peace proposal is that a reformist Russian government would automati-cally abandon traditional foreign policy goals. For the incentives of the most well-meaning Russian government are quite different.

Nationalism is on the rise, and there is a great temptation to ease the pain of transition to market economics for the Russian population by appealing to that basic instinct. This is reflected in President Boris Yeltsin's refusal to go along with NATO in punishing Serbia and in his reaction to the Partnership proposal. Mr. Yeltsin is reported to have asked that all the successor states of the Soviet Union and all former East European satellites join it simultaneously, thereby fulfilling a decade-long Kremlin policy of diluting NATO to the point of irrelevance.

At the moment, Russian armies are in Moldova, Georgia, Azerbaijan, Estonia, Latvia and Tankistan and participate in some of the local civil wars with a strategy that seems designed to make these new republics — all of them members of the United Nations — rue their independence. The foreign minister of Russia has repeatedly put forward a scheme for a Russian monopoly on peacekeeping in the "near abroad," indistinguishable from an at-tempt to re-establish Moscow's domination. By its silence and its repeated invocation of an American-Russian partnership, the United States acquiesces in these actions.

A moderate Russian foreign policy will be impeded, not helped by turning a blind eye to the reappearance of historic Russian imperial pretensions. Russia's effort at reform cannot exempt it from accepted principles of conducting foreign policy. It is in fact ambiguity about dividing lines, not their existence, and ambiva-lence about Western reactions, not their certainty, that tempt militarists and nationalists. Reform will be strengthened if moderates are put in a position of highlighting the dangers of a nationalistic Russian policy.

Russia and America share a mutual interest in a stable Europe and Central Europe. This can be achieved only by America's presence in Europe, which is based on NATO. Stability in Europe requires reaffirming the centrality of NATO rather than diluting it in an abstract multilateralism.

This leads to the following conclusions: The Partnership for Peace should be redefined to deal primarily with political, economic and cultural issues for which the proper venue is the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, not NATO.

 NATO must face the fact that some form of membership for Poland. Hungary the Czech Republic and Slovakia is inevitable. In the wake of the NATO summit, German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has urged speeding up the entry of these four countries into the European Union, of which they are already associate members. Since almost all the members of the European Union are also members of NATO, it is inconceivable that the Union will for long accept the notion that some of its territory is not protected. At that point at the latest, either the NATO guarantee will be extended or NATO will fall apart.

A statesman can always escape his dilemmas by making the most lavorable assumptions about the future. The new Russian leadership is entitled to understanding for the anguish of trying to overcome two generations of Communist misrule, and to help in building a new society. But in pursuing that goal, American policy must not be embarrassed to emphasize that domestic reform, however desirable, contributes to a better world only if Russia embraces the disciplines of a cooperative inter-seemed likely before the Russian elections. The door to membership has been declared theoretically open; hints have been given as to how best to approach that door. But no clear conditions have been laid out for passing through it. This should be done sooner rather than later. Meanwhile, it is worth reflecting on the com-plementary tasks and possibilities of the other great Brussels house, the European Union. For its founding fathers, the Community was neither just a deluxe free trade area nor merely an association against the Soviet threat. Its most important purpose was to make war between Europeans impossible. Economic integration was a means to that higher political end.

East Europeans Should Get a Real West European 'Yes' in 1994

With time, as often happens, the means have come to be taken for the end. The original end has been largely forgotten, partly because it has been achieved. In Western Europe, that is. Elso-where in Europe we once again have wars.

The area we call East Central Enrope — including Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia and Slovenia, but with its own important set of diverse borderline cases, such as the Baltic states, Croatia and Romania - is both geographically and politically somewhere in beeen. Mourir pour Sarajevo? has become an all too real question, above all for those countries, including some East Central European states, with troops in the former Yugoslavia.

In the still fortunately hypothetical case of an acute external threat to the security of East Central Europe, we in the West, in NATO.

PARIS — At its Brussels summit, NATO By Timothy Garton Ash, Michael Mertes and Dominique Moïsi promised more to East Central Europe than would be called to give an answer far more substantial either than the Partnerships for leace or than that given in practice, so far, to madyred Bosnia. Meanwhile, we in Western Europe, in the European Union, have political and economic means at our disposal to help ensure that the potential internal sources of insecurity in the region are diminished rather than exacerbated.

Two things, above all, need to be done, First, as a matter of urgency, ensure that West European markets are prised open for the goods that the East Central Europeans can export now. Continunion of fragile economic recovery depends on these exports, and consolidation of fledging democracies depends on that recovery.

At the moment, we have a shameful protectionism, whether against Polish textiles, Czech steel or Hungarian foodstuffs. We send those countries countless advisers to preach the virtues of the free market and free trade, but we do not practice what we preach. They are told that they can hope to join the European Union only if they transform their economies, but they are denied the market access that alone would sustain that transformation. A perfect catch-22. It would be naive to pretend that this will be easy, at a time of acute recession. Conventional wisdom suggests that it will cost jobs in Western Europe, but this is only half the truth. It fails to take account of the new export opportunities that a sustained recovery in the East would bring for West European producers. the fresh breezes of low-wage competition should be part of the salutary shock needed to restore our compentiveness in a wider world. If the United States was right to embrace the North American Free Trade Agreement, then the European Union should welcome a NEFTA — a new European free trade area.

Secondly, the European Union should give more political substance to what is already understood to be an "engagement contract" with the East Central European states. In this respect, the Maastricht treaty is not just the end of an old road. It also contains elements of a new beginming, particularly with its explicit and implicit provisions for variable geometry.

For example, not all EU states will join in monetary union. Not all will participate in defense integration in the framework of the Westem European Union. And there will be states, such as Turkey, which do not belong to the Union but are associate members of the WEU. This new flexibility offers chances for developing the relationship with East Central Europe. In an article more than two years ago, we suggested that these states should be invited to participate directly in at least some of the foreign and security policy discussions of the European Community member states. The case for doing so has not grown any weaker. We also suggested that they should be given some way of being involved in the European elections of 1994, as a trial run for full participation in those of 1999.

In thinking about the enlargement negotia tions after 1995, one should realizm the princi-ple of the primacy of politics which guided the founding fathers of the Community. Especially with the new flevibility of the Union, it is not at all impossible to envisage full political membership together with long-term economic transition arrangements. We did it for Spain, Portugal and Greece. We did it in the very special case of the former East Germany. We could do it again.

A further consequence is that, in thinking about the future institutional and constitutional shape of the European Union, we must be thinking of arrangements that would work with 20 or more member states.

Last but not least, there is associate membership of the WEU — a bridge to the security which NATO is still so reluctant to offer.

Each one of these steps would help to combat the disillusionment with "Europe" that is now so palpable in countries that set out to "return to Europe" with so much hope and elan just four years ago, in those four years, our neighbors have grown used to hearing from us the "yes" which in fact means "no." In 1994, at least one of the two great Brussels houses should offer a "yes" that really means "yes."

RUNNING AS A WOMAN: Gender and Power in American Politics

By Linda Witt, Karen M. Paget and Glenna-Matthews. 330 pages. $22.95. Free Press.

Reviewed by Ellen Chesler Peninists like to say that all political reality is socially constructed. Simply put, this means that in public life there are really no objective truths. How the world is understood depends on who's doing understood depends on who's doing the interpreting, and men have typi-cally been both the actors and the scales, first making history and then writing it up. The twin spin men put on events distorts what we experience and then learn as fact, and, in this way, women are doubly disadvantaged. To redress the bal-ance, we have only one recourse. We must claim our own stations as politicians and as pundits.

I have rarely seen this dictum put to more productive and accessible use than in "Running as a Woman: Gender and Power in American Politics," the joint work of Linda Witt, a journalist, Karen M. Paget, a political scientist, and Glenna a political scientist, and titerna Matthews, a historian. It is a spirited book in which women pundits write engagingly about women in politics and manage, perhaps not surprisingly, to claim women's central importance in determining the course of American history in 1992. Some of what the authors have to say is not new, and their material is not always well-organized, nor their assertions carefully docu-mented. The book too often has the feel of a rushed job, its historical framework hurnedly imposed on current events. Still, its main argument seems sound, exploding much of what men have been telling us is important in U.S. politics.

It was bid four hearts after his pariner's those women soldiers who left their children behind when they went to fight in the Gulf War and those lew who then transcally returned home in body bags. It was working motiers who wanted a family-leave bill and women shoppers offended by a president who was unfamiliar with the workings of a supermarket checkent. It was women who defended the privacy and integrity of their hodies, even if they don't always approve of abortion uncondiways approved to the points scored by the accomplished Hillary Rodham Clinton when Marilyn Quayle made that silly gaffe about the essentially nurturing nature of women.

Such anecdotal evidence suggests what harder politing data confirms: Women's votes gave the advantage to Bill Clinton and numerous other Democratic sindidates; women elected more of their own to represent them at all levels of public office than ever before; for the first time, a woman's pointial action committee raised more money than any other organized interest group any other organized interest group

— $6 million, a fourfold increase since 1990, for Emily I List, and, perhaps most important of all, women were finally liberated to stand for election as women, refeling in their status and no longer tilking like the boys. Women's expense in issues such as health, education and child care that once manipulized their candidacies now corresponded with the major concerns of voters, male and female alike.

This transformation and its significance are highlighted by the book's historical allusions. It has been just a few years, after all, since Patricia Schooder, when asked by reporters whether she would be running for president as a woman, responded: "Do I have an option?" It has been less than a decade since Waiter Mondale's handlers, responded to the gender gap in the 1980 election by putting Geraldine Ferraro on the ticket but refused to let her talk about women's issues. It has been little more than 70 years since women won the vote.

The lingering effects of women's secondary role accounts for why it has taken so long to consolidate our power. We learn that the outspoken Jeannette Rankin of Montana, who twice lost her seat when 'she opposed America's entry into World War I and II, was not typical of the few pioneering women in Congress. More common were wid ows who came to Washington to fill their husband's shoes. Progress since says this book, has been comomised by ideological divisions Post.

In Africa, Both Money and Paris's Role Shrink

By Barry James

International Herald Tribune PARIS — The halving in value of the French-backed franc in Africa this month is widely seen as a serious blow to France's influence in its former colonies.

But analysts say that the economic and political situation in those countries has deteriorated so badly that there are no immediate signs of France's commercial rivals' jumping in to exploit it.

"I don't think there is anyone waiting in the wings to take over from France," said Steve McDonald, executive vice president of the African-American Institute in New York, "The attitude here is that these countries are still basically a French problem, even if the devaluation shows a slackening of French interest."

After France made it clear it could no longer prop up their economies, 13 West and Central African countries were forced to devalue the CFA, their common currency, by 50 percent at a summit meeting in Dakar, Senegal, this month.

A 14th member of the Francophone group, the Comoro Islands, devalued the CFA by 25 percent CFA stands for "Communauté Financière en Afrique" in West Africa and "Cooperation Financière en Afri-years, but only if they accept severe fiscal zone Aug. 2. and economic discipline.

Michael Hough, director of the Institute for Strategic Studies at the University of Pretoria, said France was more concerned in assuring its position in the European Union than in continuing its long-standing responsibilities in Africa.

"I don't think the French will totally withdraw, ever," he said. "But certainly, these countries are more and more going to find out that they must face hard reality."

The CFA had kept its parity of 50 to the French Franc since 1948, backed by the French treasury. But the link became increasingly distorted as France tied its currency closely to the Deutsche mark. This made the CFA in African countries so strong that production costs soared, exports were fettered and speculation was rife. Thus goods smuggled in from Nigeria were much cheaper in Benin than locally manufactured products, even after passing through the hands of several Lebanese middlemen.

In the first six months of last year, France spent 5 billion francs (5847 million) buying CFA francs that were shipped in container loads by Nigerian middlemen via England and shipped across the frontier from Switzerland in convoys of trucks. To stem speculation, France ended the

Then, at a summit meeting of Frenchspeaking countries in Mauritius in October, the French government served notice that it would make future aid to its former colonies conditional on their submitting to the discipline of the International Monetary Fund widely referred to in Africa as the "International Misery Fund." Since Jan. 1, all French aid to Africa has been subordinated to agreements with the IMF and the World Bank.

The devaluation coupled with IMF discipline, will mean a massive drop in living standards throughout the region. For example, the IMF insists that countries not revalue salaries shrunk by the devaluation.

The devaluation meant that the price of a Mercedes limousine doubled overnight for the elite. More seriously, the escalating price of imported food brought closer the threat of a social explosion. Although the devaluation improved the competitiveness of exports from the region. the beneficial effects will take some time to work through, while the crisis is here and now, analysts said.

"This is going to have serious political ramifications," said Mr. McDonald, a for-mer U.S. diplomat in Africa who was in Gabon when the devaluation was an-

Mr. McDonald said the devaluation "has been taken in these countries as a sign of French withdrawal, of a lack of interest. Those in power in countries like Gabon feel they have been left to float out there."

He said the devaluation had seriously weakened the political elite in such countries as Chad, Gabon and even Ivory Coast, the most developed of the French-speaking African countries, which is adjusting to the end of an era with the death of President Felix Homobouci-Boigny.

The effect on French companies in the region is likely to be mixed. Some will benefit because of the huge reduction in salary costs and increased export opportunities. Companies that rely on imports, or firms in France that export to Africa, are facing a tough new world. Africa is France's most important export market after Western Europe.

If the devaluation does lead to social and political unrest, and open the way to exploiation of the situation by countries such as Libya, will France still be prepared to commit troops to guarantee security? The withdrawal of economic support could make this talks on Bosnia, the secretary-general of the United Nations, Butros Butros Ghali, spoke in Geneva with Robert L. Kroon for the International Herold Tribune.

Q&A: UN Chief Cites a Lack Of Political Will Over Bosnia

Q. In view of the persistent flouring of Security Council resolutions by the warring parties in Bos-nia, notably the Serbs, how do you feel about the recent decision by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to consider air strikes to open the airport of Tuzla for humanitarian relief flights?

A. My reply is a very simple one. As long as the UN member states are not ready to use force—and I am not saying that I am in favor of that option — as long as there is no political will to mpose a solution, the UN can do only three things: negotiations and more negotiations, provide the maximum of humanitarian assistance, and contain the military conflict on the ground. Peacekeeping and peace enforcement depends on the political will of the international community and the parties involved in the conflict.

Q. But hasn't the recent NATO decision shown the will to use force, if only for the sake of the alliance's own credibility?

A. Yes, but only for a very limited, pinpoint operation, at Tuzla and in Srebrenica where the Canadian contingent has to be relieved by Dutch troops. But I am talking about peace enforcement for the whole of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, and I am not so sure that is the right solution.

Q. Are you worried about possible Serbian reprisals against the UN peacekeepers if air strikes are ordered?

A. It is not only because of the blue helmets. If the UN force commander and my special represen-tative ask for air strikes, we will do it. But are you sure NATO is really willing to use force? It may be the beginning of an escalation, of a wider war that would engulf the neighboring states, Kosovo, Mac-edonia and perhaps the whole of the Balkans. The decision is up to the member states, because they are supplying the soldiers and they are paying the

Q. In other words, you are faced with a Mission Impossible and the Serbs can continue their catand-mouse game?

A. Do you have a better solution? We simply must accept this kind of Mission Impossible. If a political solution looks impossible at the moment, we still are doing a lot in the humanitarian field

After the collapse of another round of peace and in trying to contain the conflict. People only

The war in Bosnia is like a disease, like a cancer that could spread. If you have a cancer patient you don't write him off after two years. You continue treatment for as long as it takes, like applying chemotherapy for five, six or seven years. You cannot say the UN has failed because we have not achieved a cure for Bosnia in two years.

Now people say they are in a hurry and want a solution in a matter of days for a confrontation where genocide and atrocities have been committed and houses destroyed. This may take years, and I don't think we should call it a failure and give up.

Q. You have instructed your special representative, Yasushi Akashi, to draw up concrete plans for opening up Tuzla airport and enforce the rotation of UN troops in Srebrenica. What are those plans?

A. This is a new and specific situation, which needs careful study. That's why I have sent my undersecretary for political affairs [Marrack Goulding] to NATO for further details. As for the rotation in Srebrenica, we have received assur-ances that everything will be solved in the next few days. Tuzla is another matter.

Q. The Serbs say they will allow the rotation in Srebrenica but are putting limitations on the armament of the Dutch contingent. Is Radovan Karadzic, leader of the Bosnian Serbs, empowered to dictate such terms to UN troops?

A. I am not familiar with such technical details. You should ask the UN commanders on the ground. The military people will determine whether those arms are necessary or not.

Q. Talking about UN commanders, why didn't you renew the assignment of General Jean Cot?

A. I don't want to comment on that subject.

Q. You have often called for more troops for the peacekeeping force in Bosnia. The Islamic nations have offered 15,000 troops, including an Iranian contingent of 10,000. Are you considering that

A. Malaysia already has a unit in Bosnia and there's an offer from Bangladesh.

Q. What about the Iranians? A. We cannot accept troops which might get involved directly or indirectly in the conflict. We don't invite troops with a political commitment, and that's why we didn't accept troops from coun-tries bordering on the former Yugoslavia either.

MASERU, Lesotho - Fierce fighting between rival army groups broke out Sunday in the capital of the southern African kingdom of Lesotho, killing at least two rebel soldiers, a diplomat said.

The clashes crupted shortly after dawn, and the diplomat said "ferocious shooting" lasted about 35 minutes, followed by two hours of sporadic gunfire, interspersed by mortar bombs.

The conflict was apparently sparked by a dispute over military pay, and diplomats said they did not believe it was related to dissatisfaction with the six-month-old government of Prime Minister member Lesotho military erupted into open hostility.

Officials Defend Quake Relief Efforts

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

LOS ANGELES - Federal and state officials insisted Sunday that they were doing all they could to cope with the aftermath of the Los Angeles earthquake, describing the operation as the biggest urban relief effort in American history.

Housing Secretary Henry G. Cisneros and James Lee Witt, director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, defended relief efforts in a television interview Sunday. They said the operation had improved considerably since last week, when victims stood in long lines

Mr. Cisaeros said 17,000 people had registered in 13 emergency agency centers. He said 1:000 victims were to receive relief checks Sun-

The federal agency has promised that six one-stop rehef centers would open Monday to process applications for housing, low-cost loans and other assistance.

Governor Pete Wilson said Sunday that damage had topped total losses caused by a 1992 Florida hurricane designated Andrew, a $30 billion natural disaster that had ranked as the costlicst ever in the United States.

Mr. Cisneros called the assistance program the biggest urban relief effort in U.S. history. Mr. Witt said federal, state and local governments had responded well. "They've done a good job," he said.

Transportation managers, fearing another week of nightmarish traffic jams, scrambled to come up with a better plan for rerouting hun-dreds of thousands of motorists around collapsed sections of the region's crumpled highway system. Disaster relief threatened to become a major problem last week as federal centers established to handle thousands of earthquake-related claims could not process applications fast enough to satisfy weary, hard-pressed victims. Pederal and state officials responded by ordering that 1,000 workers be sent to the centers. Emergency agency employees are to come from threughour the country, including Puerto Rico, to help meet the demands.

The predawn earthquake Monday, measuring 6.5 cm the Richter scale, killed 56 people. It also left 25,000 people homeless and threw thousands out of work as commercial buildings collapsed. The quake injured more than 7,800 people, 1,300 schoolsy.

Residents were shaken Saturday night by two strong aftershooks that kept jangled nerves on edge. By Sunday the aftershocks were less frequent and less powerful.

National Guard troops erected tents at six locations where quarke victims were living without adequate provisions of sanitation. The tents are equipped with field kitchens, as well as toilets, showers and electricity. Cots and sleeping bags were provided.

Getting into the military tents and out of makeshift shelters is the first step toward regaining normal lives, Mr. Cisneros said Satur-

"It's a way to play intofthe search for permanent housing," he said. "Out here in the park by themselves, no one's going to come look for them." The new tents can house as many as 14,000 people.

One problem, officials said, is that many victims refused to go to Red Cross shelters that were opened immediately, fearing that the roofs might cave in on them. In some cases, illegal immigrants were reductant to register with the Red Cross because they were afraid of being deported. Governor Pete Wilson said officials would not order people into the shelters. These are people who are frightened and we are not going to force them at bayonet point," he said.

National Guard officers said they had been told to be prepared to maintain the camps for as along as two wicks. Some local politicians were concerned that the tent cities might be around far longer and drive away business.

The quake victim received a boost Saturday when President Bill Clinton amounced the release of $283 million in new funds to help relief efforts.

relief efforts.

"We are working hard and making progress to ensure that assistance goes to California residents as quickly as passible," said the White House press secretary. De Dee Meyers.

Of the new funds, $140 million will be used to support $400 million in Schall Business Administration loops. The terraintee $143 million will support 5400 million in Small Business Admissistration loans. The remaining 5143 million will cover the full range of Hederal Emergency Management Agency disaster relief activities.

To date, Mr. Clinton has announced 5639 million for loans, 341 million for highway reairs and $143 million in new Emergency Mar-

The official said the complaints had been filed by individuals rather than states, and added it was not clear whether they would be heard by the full commission, which convenes Jan. 31. The official had no details on the complaints.

Der Spiegel listed two other complaints against Germany that it said would be heard in Geneva: a case of a schoolteacher's dismissal because of her activities in the East German Communist party, and a prisoner's claim of inadequate compensation for work in iail.

Israel issists that it remain in charge on the borders, both to assure its own safety and to forestall an appearance of Palestinian sovereignty, a matter that is supposed to be left to a later phase under the outline agreement signed with the PLO in September. For his part, Mr. Arafat says that without responsibility at the crossings he will in effect be left with a ghetto in Jericho. His negotiators have at times called Israeli security con-

According to a press report in Jerusalem, one idea is to use sophisticated technology to give Israel an "invisi-ble presence" on the frontier. That would avoid having to post security officers on the spot, a presence that the Palestinians consider unacceptable if they are to rule themselves. On a stopover in Cairo on Sunday, the PLO leader did not sound quite as optimistic as the Israeli foreign minister, but he agreed that progress had been made toward ending an impasse that has contributed to the dwindling of public support for the September accord, especially among Palestinians in the occupied territories.

points below Libbr. Corridor floaters accrue no interest on any day when Libor falls outside the corridor. The width of the corridor differs from issue to issue. The usual reference point is three-month Libor, which currently is 3.25 percent.

Export Development Corp. of Canada, for example, set a range of 2.5 to 4 percent in the first six months. This range then widen the each half-year, with the minimum remaining constant and the maximum rising to 4.75, 5.5 and finally 6 percent. Morgan uses an alternate formula, with both the floor and the ceiling rising but at different speeds so that the corridor of 1 percentage point at the start is 2.65 percentage goints wide at the end. In most other issues, the end-period corridor is 5 percentage

Another variable is the size of the spread over Libor, which can range from 50 basis points pend by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to the 100 basis points paid by Morgan and UBS. The variables, including the offering price, are all used to fine tune the terms so that the issuer ends up with an all-in cost of funds below Libor

Details of the final cost to the issuers are hard to come by, but

NEW YORK — Paramount

Communications Inc., swinging back to its original partner, endorsed the latest merger offer from vaccom Inc., but left the door open for the rival bidder in the king battle QVC Network Inc.

**Parameters** board on Friday terminated its merger agreement with QVC, but the chairman, Martin S. Drivis, said, "The board is prepared to revisit today's recomidation if further bids are reeived. The board has asked each ade to make its best bid by Feb. 1. QVC's chamman, Barry Diller, esponded: The screw turns once eain. We will evaluate events and pond appropriately." Viacom's chairman, Sumner Redstone, increased his bid Redstone, increase in the last Tuesday by adding more cash and agreeing to give shareholders some protection against any de-clines in Viacom's stock, within a certain range, after the merger. Viacom is now offering $107 a share in cash for 50.1 percent of bid of $92 a share in cash for the same percentage and stock. The Paramount board's dec sion came after the stock marks had closed on Friday alternoon. Paramount's stock ended the day at $80 a share, up 37.5 cents.

One sign of how desperate the battle has become was the tone of the letters each side sent to the in the past year. Viacom's bankers, Smith Bar-ney Shearson, countered that "it and acided: "We don't accept eiis disingenuous for Allen & Co. to disparage Viacom's businesses' and detrimental." Viacom's B shares closed fri-day at $37.375, down 25 cents on the American Stock Exchange.

and characterized its analysis of future trading in Viacom stock as "absurd on its face." Allen & Co. late Friday took issue with Viacom's evaluating QVC stock at $37.50 a share when QVC's stock is currently trading at $44 a share. Its high in the past year was $73.

A person close to Smith Barney contended that it used the $37.50 figure because that is the level at which it estimates QVC would trade if it won the battle. The stock of a winning company in a merger battle generally declines. Currently, QVC is seen as the loser.

The stock has been as high as $61 mount : board said Friday that "the letters take very extreme ther interpretation."

The executive said the opinion Paramount's investment banker. Lazard Freres & Co. "made clear that Viacom's bid was marginally superior.

The executive added, By intimating that it would improve its offer. QVC Network has itself made clear that it recognizes Viacom has a stronger offer."
Viacon and Paramount originally announced a merger agree-ment in September. But QVC came forward with a rival bid and successfully challenged the Via-com pact in the Delaware courts. and on Dec. 22, the Paramount board endorsed QVC's offer.

The board's reversal Friday did not surprise traders. The board made a logical decision, given the amount of cash that Viacom has put up and the protection on the back end, which effectively adds cash to that portion of the bid," Edward Haich, a media analyst for UBS Securities, said.

MADRID — Volkswagen AG's favorable shifts in exchange rates.

All these things are in part bad chairman has said that the German automaker's troubled Spanish unit, SEAT SA, deceived it last year by withholding an internal audit showing losses much higher than reported to Volkswagen's board. The chairman, Ferdinand Piech. made the assertion in an interview published Sunday by the Spanish daily newspaper El Pais. Mr. Piech said Volkswagen was considering legal action against the former management of SEAT, Sociedad Española de Automoviles de Turismo, pending an investiga-tion by outside auditors.

"I'm risking my job here due to the big unexpected losses like the ones at SEAT," Mr. Piech said in the interview at Volkswagen headquarters in Wolfsburg, Germany. "And you can be sure I didn't cause them."

He said Volkswagen had discovered that SEAT's losses and restructuring "cost 20 times more" than what the man who was then chairman, Juan Antonio Diaz Alvarez, had reported to Wolfsburg. Mr. Piech estimated a recovery plan for Seat will cost 182 billion pesetas ($1.26 billion).

Production will be moved to a new plant at nearby Martorell. Volkswagen's board agreed to pump in 1.4 billion Deutsche marks ($812 million) to increase Development Bank. U.S. companies were given

Mr. Piech said VW investigators had found that a SEAT report pre-dicting a 1993 loss of 80 billion pesetas "disappeared," while SEATs management told VW's while board last June that the Spanish unit would lose only 12 billion pesetas.

Mr. Piech also accused SEAT of

Bonn Aide Sees Hope for Jobs in '95

Compiled by Our Staff From Disp FRANKFURT - Economics Minister Günter Rexrodt said on Sunday that unemployment would increase in Germany this year but the trend would reverse in 1995. According to the text of a television interview, Mr. Rexrodt said: "The year 1994 will be a hard year with higher unemployment. "I assume this trend can be expected to change in '95."

Pressure on the job market would ease next year, he said, because restructuring measures taken by com-panies would be advanced or fin-ished by then, and the East German job market would enjoy an upturn. The number of unemployed West Germans rose to 2,494,000 in December, the highest figure for that month in postwar history. The unemployment rate was 8.1 percent. In Eastern Germany, the jobless total rose to 1.18 million, giving a rate there of 15.4 percent.

Another member of the Bonn government, Finance Minister Theo Waigel, was quoted over the weekend as saying that 5 billion Deutsche marks ($2.85 billion) in savings would have to be found in the federal budget in 1995.

Mr. Waigel was quoted in Bild am Sountag as saying: "Just like this year, the 1995 budget I will be presenting in July will have to inpainting a rosy picture by setting clude extra savings beyond the production targets above SEAT's plant capacity, basing plans on "impossible" professional procession of the procession of the

The Sweet Smell Of Illegal Smoke

Perhaps only in Taipei would Yung An Investment Co. who is Western tobacco salesmen bat-being investigated for his intling a local monopoly urge the government to allow even more competitors into their small and static share of the market.

But foreign cigarette compa-mes reckon it may be the only way to compete with Taiwan's hottest brand, Mild Sevens, smuggled in from Japan by way of Hong Kong, and other duty-free ports.

Taiwan authorities estimate that smuggless are landing 40 shipping containers of illegal smokes each month, about 20 million packs. This entrepre-neurial display is costing the government about 4 billion Taiwan dollars ($153 million) in lost tax revenues each year.

"Anything legal, Taiwanese people pay no attention to it," said David Chen, a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute of Taiwan, a lobby group for for-agn importers. "But if it's illegal, they have to have it."

Such is the attraction of smuggied Mild Sevens that smokers will pay about $2.20 for a pack of black-marker cigarettes com-pared with $1.40 for other imported brands and about $0.85 for a pack of Long Lifes, the dominant local brand. Taipei bens the sale of Japanese-made cigarettes — a re-sponse to a perennial trade deficit with Japan - but Mild Sevens made in Europe are leof course, they can't really compete with illegal imports notable by their lack of health warnings and tax stamps.

Since Taiwan opened its to-bacco market in 1987, the state's Tobacco and Wine Monopoly Bureau has maintained a 75 percent market share. But the incentive of a $200,000 profit per smuggled 40-foot (12-meter) container has helped contraband ciga-rettes take a 14 percent market share, leading the remaining 11 percent tolegitimate importers.

The American exporters response is to highlight Taiper's lost are resigned from lar conlost tax refermes from lax controls and to urge that restrictions on Japanese-made ciga-rettes be dropped.

7,102 Ex-Clients

The concept of client-broker confidentiality took a battering in a Taipei court recently. According to local newspapers, Huang Wan-chih, a director of being investigated for his involvement in banking irregularities, accessed 7,102 other people of investment misbehavior.

"To ease his burden, he pointed the finger at more than 7,000 other investors and investment officials," Taipei's China News reported. "As a result he has made a large number of enemies."

The Captain's Body

Arms dealing and Tarwan can be an unhealthy mix, as French companies and Taipei newspaper readers have learned. After Paris allowed a few squadrons of Mirage fighter planes to be sold to Taipei last year, French businessmen found themselves personae non gratae in Beijing. Selling arms to Taiwan is a fast way to poor commercial relations with Beijing, which France - after closing the Mirage sale—now acknowledges. Pledging no repeat of such sales, France apparently is again a friend of China. Beijing's next candidate for blacklisting may emerge from a complex murder investigation that is captivating Taiwan. Captain Yin Chin-leng, a weapons procurement specialist in Taiwan's navy, left the Lai Lai Soybean Milk shop in the Neihu area on the morning of

Dec. 9 and was not again seen alive; his body washed up on a nearby beach the next day. Police say Captain Yin was apparently preparing to reveal irregularities in deals in which $400 million worth of German submarine and minesweeper parts are alleged to have been involved.

Also, in the course of the investigation, local reports say three Navy officers confessed to taking bribes to ensure that a $45 million contract to build surveillance ships went to an state-owned Italian shipyard.

The search for Captam Yin's killer continues, as do revelations about the murky side of Taiwan's arms purchases. When questioned in Taiwan's legislature, Defense Minister Sun Chen said weapons procurement systems were be-youd his ministry's control, assing the buck to President Lee Teng-hui's office.

By David E. Pitt New York Times Service

UNITED NATIONS, New York - With the world's forests vanishing at an accelerating rate. rich and poor countries have agreed on a draft accord that would put forest preservation on a par with the commercial demands of the global timber industry. But the agreement, reached in Geneva, falls far short of what many developing countries and environmental

The goal was to complete a new version of the International Tropical Timber Agreement, a 1983 commodity pact that is supposed to promote environmentally benign free trade in wood harvested in the tropics, including logs, plywood and veneer sheets. The original ment expires March 31. UN figures show tropical timber as worth $7.5 billion a year in an courage conservation-oriented logging in the temperate forests of the northern industrial nations. Under a compromise last week that awaits formal ratification, developing countries would drop their insistence that the pact be ernanded to cover all timber.

For their part, the northern-countries would pledge to adopt "appropriate guidelines and crite-ria for sustainable management" of their forests, and affirm the need to provide developing countries with appropriate resources for conservation programs.

The draft agreement also calls on countries to submit regular reports on progress toward practices that would let them use their forests while preserving them.

But environmentalists at the talks expressed dismay, characterizing the overall compromise as a public-relations effort by both sides to cover up a lack of political will to come to grips with the problems of deforestation

LVMH

MOËT HENNESSY . LOUIS VUITTON

THE FOLLOWING POINTS CLARIFY A NUMBER OF QUESTIONS THAT HAVE BEEN RAISED CONCERNING THE RESTRUCTURING OF LVMH RELATIONSHIPS WITH GUINNESS PLC

- 1) The LVMH sale of a 34 % stake in Moët Hennessy to Guinness is priced fairly, based on an earnings multiple 30 % above the average multiple of comparable companies in the wine and spirits industry (Guinness, Grand Metropolitan, Allied-Lyons, Seagram, Pernod Ricard). According to IBES Focus, an independent organization which surveys analysts earnings estimates, these companies were valued at a multiple of 15 times the average projected net earnings for 1993 and 1994, whereas the sale of a minority interest in Moet Hennessy to Guinness was based on a multiple of 20.
- 2 ) The transaction's FF 11 billion in proceeds to LVMH, combined with declining interest rates, will cut the Group's financial expenses, on a full year basis, by FF 1.5 billion from the 1993 level.
- 3 ) LVMH reaffirms its commitment to maintain a 66 % interest in Moët Hennessy. The champagne and cognac activities remain core strategic businesses for LVMH and a further reduction in the Group's stake in Moet Hennessy is neither a short-term nor a long-term objective.
- 4) LVMH's return on invested capital in the perfumes and luggage segments is three times higher than in the wine and spirits segments. Therefore, the sale of a 34 % stake in Moet Hennessy to Guinness is expected to benefit LVMH's long-term profitability.
- 5) LVMH's strategy is to continue to build its core activities in the luxury sector where its unique expertise gives it competitive advantage. Therefore, LVMH will not diversify into press and media activities beyond the limited investments it already has in La Tribune and Investir.
- 6) LVMH sales for the last months of 1993 were better than expected in most sectors. Preliminary consolidated sales for 1993 are expected to reach FF 23.8 billion, a 10 % increase over the 1992 level.

International Herald Tribune COPENHAGEN - Surya Bonaly won her fourth straight Europe an figure skating championship, trailed closely by Oksana Bainl, the Ukrainian world champion. They used to be the Nancy Kerrigan and Tonya Harding of Europe, but now Bonaly and Band are looking more like Astaire and Rogers.

"For me it is not important to be always first," Bain's said. "In sports competitions it is always the best competitor who wiss, and at the moment today Surya is beiter."

It might help her knowing that none of Bonaly's previous European championships led to anything greater. It might also help Bonaly to understand how difficult it will be for Kanaly and Market and Ma be for Kerrigan and Harding (the U.S. justice system willing) to win anything next month in Lillehammer, Norway. For now, the Olym-nic gold medal would seem to be for Bonaly and Baul to decide.

Katarina Witt promises to be there, too, but she is skating for different purposes. Asked whether it was impossible for her to win her third gold medal, she said: "Oh yeah, sure. But that's O.K. I just want to go there and give my best."

The free competition ran in two stages on Saturday. In midafternoon, the Brondby Hall crowd of 2,500 clapped in unison at the sight of Witt in her red dress and hair braid. The day before, she had left the rink in tears, having botched a double axel in her technical pro-gram to stand in minth place. She needed to finish ahead of cither of her German teammates — Tanja Szewczenko, the German champi-on, and Marina Kielmann, who had medaled in the last four European Championships — in order to qualify for the Olympic team.

"I'm always nervous, but I was more nervous especially here," said Witt, who reared after winning the Olympics in 1988. "The feeling was if I fail, my career is over. I felt so much pressure. Then I came out and heard them, and I said, I don't want to disappoint everybody."

Immediately she hit a triple toe-loop/double-toe-loop combina-tion, followed by a triple salchow and a strong double axel. She was skating to "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" The same might well have been said about the corneback of Jayne Towill and Christopher Dean, the British ice dancing champions in the 1984 Olympics. On their way to the Russian world champions "I feel a little bit sad, but what can Maya Usova and Alexander Zhuha, with whom they had been tied Torvill and Dean had the most, and so they were judged European champions, with Gritschuk and Platov second and Usova and Zhulin plummeting to third.

PORTLAND, Oregon - As a grand jury continued to hear testimony to decide whether to indict her, the U.S. figure skater Tonya Harding publicly denied for the first time that she had anything to do with the Jan. 6 attack on her rival Nancy Kerngan.

"There's not a lot that I can say about it," Harding said after practicing on the rink at the Clackamas Town Center. "All I know is, I know I haven't done anything wrong."

Until now, Harting, whose ex-husband and bodyguard are among four men arrested and bodygnard are among four men arrested in an alleged conspiracy to injure Kerngan, had refused to detend herself in public, allowing her attorneys to speak for her. As recently as Thursday, in an interview on ABC television, she said she could say nothing about the retent. ing about the attack.

Three of the four people arrested in the case — bodygnard Shawn Eckardt, alleged bit man Shane Minoaka Stant and alleged getaway car driver Derrick Smith - are negotiating with prosecutors about plea bargains in exchange for their cooperation, according to a source close to the case. Jeff Gillooly, Harding's ex-husband, is not trying to cut a deal by testifying against her, the source said. The only direct link between Harding and the attack that so far has become public are accusations by Eckardt. If the case hinges on his testimony, attorneys for all sides realize his credibility will be on the line.

MELBOURNE - Pete Sampras slammed down 19 aces and hit searing forehands with radar precision to beat two-time champion Ivan Lendl in straight sets Sunday and power his way into the quarterfinals of the Australian Open.

The top-seeded Sampras, seeking his third straight Grand Slam title, was too direct and consistent for Lendl, winning 7-6 (7-5), 6-2, 7-6 (7-4) in 2 hours. 19 minutes. Sampras now will face No. 10 seed Magnus Gustaisson of Sweden, a 2-6, 6-3, 6-1, 6-1 winner over Martin Damm, an unseeded Czech. Defending champion Jim Courier, bidding for his third straight Australian Open title, bludgeoned his way to a 6-3, 6-4, 6-2 victory over No. 13 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa.

Three-time champion Steffi Graf, Arantxa Sánchez Vicario, Gabriela Sabatini and Conchita Mártinez all advanced to the final ight of the women's singles.

Sampras started slowly and beat No. 9 Mary Pierce of France,

6-3, 6-3, in a match that was far trailed 1-4 in the third set before rallying to repeat his victory over Lendl in the New South Wales

Open final in Sydney.

"It was a close match today," he said. "A couple of points here and there and he could have won." Still, Sampras was pleased with his current form. "I think that was the best match of the tournament for me," he said. Lendl found some solace in his mproved form after a disastrous 1993, but added, "You can't be happy if you lose."

"I hit the ball O.K., but Pete played better on the big points," he said. "I'm still trying to get my game together and you have to walk prop-No. 5 seed, was the first man to Graf scored her fourth successive straight-set victory, using her power and pace to down Sandrine Testand of France, 6-1, 6-2, and advance to the quarterfinals. Graf is seeking her fourth Australian Open championship and her fourth straight title in a Grand Slam. Testud never had made it past the second round at any Grand Slam, while Graf has made at least the final eight in every Slam she has contested slace 1985. The top seed in the enforced absence of Monica Seles, the defending champion, Graf has dropped only 15 games in her opening four matches and took only 55 minutes to end Testud's challenge.

Seles remains sidelined after being stabbed by a spectator in Hamburg last April.

The German next faces an American, Lindsay Davenport, who defeated No. 6 seed Mary Joe Fernandez, 6-2, 6-7 (4-7), 6-2. No. 4 seed Sabatini of Argentina beat No. 9 Mary Pierce of France,

Pierce held three match points against Sabatini here last year and beat her in the Virginia Slims Championship in November. Sanchez Vicario, the No. 2 seed. advanced with a 4-6, 6-1, 6-3 victory over No. 14 Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria, while No. 8 Manuela Maleeva-Fragnière of Switzerland and No. 5 Jana Novotna of the Czech Republic also won.

he does not have to market himself as a family man or an "educator," as some college coaches get called now and then.

He is basically a wolf in wolf's clothing, truth-in-advertising. Like Popeye, Jimmy Johnson would tell you, "I yam what I yam."

He yam a winner, too. Wherever he has coached, he was won. Five years at Oklahoma State. Five years at Miami. And now five years at Dallas. He went Sunday's National Football Conference championship predicting that the Cowboys would the 49ers' anatomics all over the field. "We will win the ball game." Johnson said. "You can put that in 3-inch headlines. We will win the ball same." headlines. We will win the ball game."

Them are lighting words in any sport, any time, but limmy doesn't care. He is politically incorrect in an anal league that monitors how much the emotionally whacked-out, physically endangered players wiggle their torsos while celebrating a touchdown.

Shake your booty too much and it will cost you money. While Jimmy Johnson was guaranteeing a calamity for the 49ers, I expected the official National Football League Truth Squad to come flying in with the butterfly nets and the hypodermic needles.

"O.K., Coach, come with us, and we're going to reprogram you. Everything's going to be all right once we lobotomic you. Electrical shock treatment. Pete Rozelle how-to-get-along tapes."

The last we heard Johnson was still loose running off at the mouth.

The last we heard, Johnson was still loose, running off at the mouth, breaking the rules of his clan. Yes, we have the occasional Mike Ditka or Buddy Ryan, but basically this business structure for innocuous statements even though the games are usually won by the team that is better at popping the other guys in the snoot. N THIS PAST week, Johnson has given a few indications of just who he is.

The home office called in Buddy Ryan for the crime of throwing a punch at a fellow assistant coach with Houston, on the sideline, during a game, viewed endlessly on national television.

Bad form, old chap, the league told Buddy. Now if Buddy gets fired, Johnson is on record that he would love to have Buddy on his side, maybe second-guessing him up close, rather than winging insults at him across the field, the way Buddy did when he was the head coach in Philadelphia. Johnson got himself in trouble this past week when he lamented that 3 P.M. games just didn't produce the same level of fan intensity as those Monday night games that start at 8 P.M. in Dallas.

"But maybe if they'll just kind of pound them a little bit before 3 o'clock," Johnson wished out loud, thereby deservedly getting himself in trouble with Mothers Against Drunk Driving, who don't think it's cute for lans to get hammered with car keys in their pockets and lethal cars out in the parking lot. But that's Jimmy.

Johnson is a cutthroat. Has been for a long time. He won a national title at Miami because he had a huge brass ego, and because he could recruit tough kids from tough backgrounds.

He was a lot like Switzer at Oklahoma. Who knows what deals they cut? The difference is that Oklahoma went overboard, and Switzer has never coached since, while Johnson left Miami still elisible for national never coacned since, while Johnson left Miami still eligible for national honors, and he has won a Super Rowl.

The bottom line is that Johnson Hosenson books tours from the membraneous field of the standards. He's got eight former Miami players on the roster, but he'd cut them in a second if they couldn't play.

AND YOU CAN SEE the competitive spark in all the Cowboys when A Johnson tells them they should whan on the 49crs.

Ken Norton, the leading tackler on the Cowboys said, "Any of us could have said it, but he was the one who said it." Emmitt Smith was asked if he had ever had a coach or teammate guarantee a victory, and Smith said, "There's a first time for everything."

"There's a first time for everything."

And quarterback Troy Aikman said, "All three of us can attest there comes a realization over the last five years that he places an extreme premium on winning football games, and that's the way it should be."
Instead of the college president and the NCAA rules, all Johnson has to worry about is getting his brutes to play and not wearing out his welcome with his old Arkansas teammate and tellow egomaniac, Jerry Jones.

There are dozens of colleges where the football coach is bigger than the president. If Jimmy wins another Super Bowl, Jones would have to fire himself first. That would be refreshing, too.

Hrovat, whose previous best showing was third in the Santa Ca-terina slalom in November, followed the example of two of Slovenia's other talented young skiers, Katja Koren and Alenka Dovzan, who have both won World Cup events for the first time this season. Schneider had high hopes of win-aing her fifth consecutive Maribor slalom after setting the best time through the 62 gates on the first leg. Victory also would have allowed her to seize the overall Cup lead from Wiberg after the Swede straddled a gate and crashed out in the first run. But Schneider, who has won three slaloms this season. skied too cautiously on the 68-pate second leg and threw away an advantage of 0.84 seconds over Hrovat to finish second with a two-lea total of 1:55.48.

Wachter failed to finish the second leg after having only the 13thbest time in the earlier run.

DENVER (AP) - NCAA officials have met with Justice Department mediators to determine whether mediation would help solve a dispute with the Black Costnes Association, which has threatened a boycott. After a three-hour session here Saturday, NCAA officials would say only that the meeting had educated them on the federal mediation process. The BCA has threatened the boycott since the NCAA convention voted against increasing scholarship limits from 13 to 14 in Division I basketball. The BCA is expected to have a similar preliminary meeting with the federal mediators. Cedric Demosey, the NCAA executive director, said that possible solutions had not been discussed at the Denver talks.

An American in Venice: Jackson Pollock Beads From a Former Banker

By John Brunton

TENICE — To walk through the narrow streets encircling Venice's Rialto market is to explore the ancient commercial heart of the city. But the tiny shops that centuries ago stocked spices and silks from the Orient have by and large been replaced by souvenir sellers, catering to demands for Taiwanese plastic gondolas and made-in-Hong Kong masks.

Many of these boutiques specialize in Murano glass, one of the symbols of Venice ever since the art of making crystal glass was rediscovered here back in the 10th century. But it's hard these days to find anything original among the mass of cave that displays contemporary glass sculptures of the Venetian artist Lucio Bubacco and the fun, colorful jewelry of Leslie Genninger, a young designer from Cincinnati, Ohio. Genninger abandoned a profitable career as an investment banker in the United States to travel around Europe and look for a different direction. Her wanderings brought her to Venice in the summer of 1988, where she fell in love with Murano

"I was both fascinated and, at the same time, appalled by what was being done with glass here in Venice. The opportunihes for creating new designs and colors are incredible, but sadly most producers insist on the safe policy of endlessly reproducing the same old designs."

Six years later, she is still here, and has successfully set up her own line of jewelry, Murano Class Act, which sells as quickly as she can make it. Fashion designers in Milan and the United States have used her work in their shows, stores stock pieces in Tokyo and New York, and she is just about to embark on a selling trip around Europe's capitals.

"I started off by representing Lucio Bu-bacco's work in America." She said. "He was the one artist in Venice who I thought used to spend a lot of time hanging out in his workshop, where I discovered a huge pile of old glass beads and ancient neck-

"I'd rip them apart, mix them up, then make my own earrings, brooches and bracelets. They all sold as soon as I put them in the shop window."

With the money she made from these designs, Genninger bought 100 kilograms (220 pounds) of 1940s and 50s beads from Murano — about 4,000 pieces in all, and again everything sold out once she'd turned them into her brand of contemporary jewelry.

Still, she felt that she could only go so far using old beads, and the next logical step would have to be producing her own beads, creating designs that were different from anything else being shown in Venice.

How did the closed, male world of the Murano master bead makers react to a brash young American woman who could hardly speak a word of Italian — let alone the local dialect — and who dared to suggest they change the tried-and-true colors and shapes of their beads?

"From the very first meeting, the reaction of these maestros of bead making has been fantastic," she said, perhaps diplo-

"The master craftsmen, who have been creating beads for 20 or 30 years, have given me incredible support and encour-agement, and I think that being a woman and a foreigner has actually been an ad-

What Genninger discovered was that the "maestros" were for the most part bored - leading a profitable, easy life, but caught in a rut of reproducing the same old designs for the big companies. "I asked them to show me their lantasy beads and they leaped at the chance, because they all have a burning passion for beads and were just waiting for the spark to relight the fire. I'd show them a picture of a Jackson Pollock painting and say 'Hey, make me a Jackson Pollock bead!'

"It's a perfect partnership, because they have the technique and skill that I lack, and can understand perfectly what I want to do. Each day we're going further with

"Take our latest idea, where we've just created a wonderful opaque salmon-pink bead, with 24-karat gold-leaf peeking in and through the design, then covered with clear crystal glass, which captures the col-ors within."

Last year, Genninger created 800 bead designs, collaborating with three maestros who flame-work solid glass beads and a who frame-work some glass beats and a dozen artisans working on glass-blown ones. They produced a total of 100,000 beads, which she then transformed into necklaces and bracelets, earrings and cuff links, brooches, buttons and stickpins that can adorn a hat, a scarf or a lapel.

Typical of the way she has taken on the Murano glass establishment is the success of her delightful glass pins. These are tiny molten drops of glass that are cut away and discarded when a large object is being

"For centuries these scarti di vetro were just thrown away," she said. "But I found there was a little bit of beauty within each one, especially if you painted on a dab of gold or silver leaf.

"At first, the glass factories just laughed in disbelief and gave me them for nothing - until they saw how fast people bought them! Now every showroom in Venice is selling them."

With her jewelry business firmly established, Genninger has decided that her next challenge will be to design chande-liers, off-beat glass mobiles à la Calder and otures. If that works out, she may well find herself as the first lady maestro of Venetian glass, a long, long way from the world of power breakfasts and investment

Intensive Porpoises, for All Intents

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — "To my horror and embar-rassment," writes Visroel Epstein of New York,
"I was informed recently — and in public — that the phrase I had always thought was for all intensive purposes was, in fact, for all intents and purposes. After the revelation, of course, the phrase began to make

In an account of a football game between Cornell and Penn, Jack Cavanaugh wrote in The New York Times: "And it was altogether fitting that today's game ended, to all extentions purposes, with a dramatic defensive effort." James Weidner of Merchantville. New Jersey, clipped this page and sent it in with the comment: "Granted, extents could conceivably fit the context of the article, but just what is the usual expression after all?"

The expression is to (sometimes for) all intents and purposes. This mondegreen was spoofed recently on the literate NBC sitcom (or litcom) The John Larroquette Show." One character uses the phrase correctly and is "corrected" by another, who claims the phrase is for all intensive purposes; a third authority then makes swimming motions and argues it is for all intensive porpoises.

The humor columnist Dave Barry, making sport of word manenhood, began a column with "It's Mister Language Person, for all intense and purposes." Evidently this solecism is widespread enough to rate delighted satiric treatment in many media; it is my job. as a straight-ahead language person, to trace its true etymology before exploring the cause of its confusion.

Off with its head: It was Henst VIII, in an act promulgated in 1546, who included the prepositional phrase to all intents, constructions and purposes." After members of Parliament made it their own, Joseph Addison shortened it in a 1709 edition of The Tatler: "Whoever resides in the World without having any Business in it . . . is to me a Dead Man to all Intents and Purposes. As in much archaic legalese, the synonyms were married in a phrase to cover all shadings of an aim to accomplish, much as "null and void" and "devise and bequeath" gave lawyers a comfortable feeling of nailing down a meaning. In today's synonymy, intent is more specific, as in "legislative intent," while purpose is general, like "purpose in life."

In his Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, Bryan Gamer derides terms like to all intents and purposes and at all relevant times as often being "liotsam" and at all relevant times as often being phrases." (Some say flotsam is what floats and jetsam is what sinks. Most authorities hold, however, that florsam is wreckage of a ship or its cargo that floats on the surface of the water, and jetsam is what is jettisoned or tossed overboard.) I disagree; the intent of to all intents and purposes is to denote practicality, as if to say "when it comes right down to it."

To come right down to it, then, why do some people say "to all intensive purposes"?

It's the Mondegreen Factor, A mondegreen is a word that is construed as it is actually heard, not as the speaker intends it to be heard. It was noted in this space long ago that the most saluted man in America was Richard Stans; Allegiance is pledged every day by millions of kids "to the republic for Richard Stans."

Although some linguists have called this stumblepunning "unwitting paronomasia," the better word is mondegreen. Coiner is the writer Sylvia Wright, who noted in a 1954 Harper's article that some children happily sang in church of "Gladly, the cross-eyed bear," when the hymn was "Gladly the cross I'd bear." She remembered the Scottish ballad "The Bonny Earl of Murray" and how she had recited it as a child: They hae slain the Earl Amurray, / And Lady Mondegreen." The damsel bleeding loyally beside the slain earl was in her romantic imagination, of course; the last line was written "and laid him on the green."

There are those who claim the word intensive to be wholly unecessary, since it means the same as intense; but if it leads to mondegreens like "all intensive purposes," I say leave it so.

The Phrasedicks - those intrepid Hawkshaws who track famous phrases back to their sources in antiquity have finally begun to fit pay dirt with what the novelist Robert Heinlein acronymed Tanstaatl.

"There Ain't No Such Thing as a Free Lunch" has often been attributed to the economist Milton Friedman; he readily admits using it, perhaps popularizing it, but discisions comage. Last year, Ralph Keyes in "Nice Guys Finish Seventh" (Leo Durocher did not say they finished "last") cited a usage in a 1949 article in The San Francisco News.

Treating that citation as a clue, Fred Shapiro of the Yale Law School library, author of the profoundly researched Oxford Dictionary of American Legal Quotations, has turned up the June 1, 1949, copy of the newspaper. In it is "The Fable of the King and All the Wise Men - or Economics in Fight Words," by Walter Morrow.

When a plague of poverty came upon an ancient land, Morrow write, the king called in his wisest counselors and demanded a short text on economics. counselors and definanced a short text on economics. A year later they is nimed with 87 disputations volumes; he ordered guards with crossbows to shoot half of them: In subsequent years, they can it to 40 volumes; he kept shooting them until the last economist prostrated himself before the king and said: "Sire, in eight words I will reveal to you all the wisdom that I have distilled through all these years from all the receivers of all the economists who more practiced their writings of all the economists who once practiced their science in your kingdom. Here is my text: There ain't no such thing as free lunch."

Note that the original (if nobody finds an earlier citation) lacks an a before the free hanch, which would conform to the name for customer enticement in saloons. And here is an unexpected phrasedickensian bonanza. The article is preceded by "Here's an editorial we published 11 years ago. In view of all the plans' now coming out of Washington, we offer this as a timely reptint.

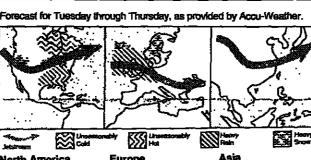

Notes Shapiro with pride, "The phrase actually dates to at least 11 years earlier than anyone has previously established."
